CHAPTER I

ONCE upon a time there were a King and a Queen who were very unhappy because they had no children. Everything else that the heart could wish for was theirs. They were rich; they lived in a wonderful palace full of the costliest treasures; their kingdom was at peace, and their people were prosperous. Yet none of these things contented them, because they wanted a little child of their own to love and to care for, and though they had been married several years, no child had come to them.

THE KING OF THE GOLDEN MOUNTAIN

There was once a merchant who had only one child, a son, that was very young, and barely able to run alone. He had two richly laden ships then making a voyage upon the seas, in which he had embarked all his wealth, in the hope of making great gains, when the news came that both were lost. Thus from being a rich man he became all at once so very poor that nothing was left to him but one small plot of land; and there he often went in an evening to take his walk, and ease his mind of a little of his trouble.

One day, as he was roaming along in a brown study, thinking with no great comfort on what he had been and what he now was, and was like to be, all on a sudden there stood before him a little, rough-looking, black dwarf. 'Prithee, friend, why so sorrowful?' said he to the merchant; 'what is it you take so deeply to heart?' 'If you would do me any good I would willingly tell you,' said the merchant. 'Who knows but I may?' said the little man: 'tell me what ails you, and perhaps you will find I may be of some use.' Then the merchant told him how all his wealth was gone to the bottom of the sea, and how he had nothing left but that little plot of land. 'Oh, trouble not yourself about that,' said the dwarf; 'only undertake to bring me here, twelve years hence, whatever meets you first on your going home, and I will give you as much as you please.' The merchant thought this was no great thing to ask; that it would most likely be his dog or his cat, or something of that sort, but forgot his little boy Heinel; so he agreed to the bargain, and signed and sealed the bond to do what was asked of him.

Wine Pilgrimage → Prince Edward County

“What Lahti described was new to me: Because Prince Edward winters are so intense, growers have to bury their vines to protect them. They hibernate them.”

LONG DOG VINEYARD & WINERY

It was a cool and misty morning when I drove out to Long Dog winery. Rain soon electrified the bright green vines, making the crows shiny black against the foggy backdrop; everything smelled fresh.

James Lahti, a tall, pale-blue-eyed winemaker, and his wife, Victoria Rose, are Toronto transplants who have lived in the County for almost 20 years. Both worked as film editors, and he still does, mainly on IMAX films—his most recent on

THE GRANGE WINERY

Visiting the Grange Winery’s vineyard, I practically dropped to the ground when I heard what sounded like three gunshots. “Bird banger,” Caroline Granger said, squeezing my shoulder reassuringly. Most growers in the County cover their vineyards in bright blue netting to keep hungry birds away, but Granger doesn’t: “I don’t want to stop the airflow. We need to embrace the environment. And I want to have easy access to the fruit.” Instead, she relies on the cannons to scare the birds off and came up with a new way to trellis the vines.

We retreated into the enormous 1872 wooden barn that houses her cellar and an extraordinary high-beamed tasting room. Granger grew up playing in this barn, turning it into the setting for an imaginary circus. She was the first to bring grapes to the property, planting her vineyards in 1999.

Granger’s 28-year-old daughter, Maggie Belcastro, her assistant at the winery, had made an incredible herbed frittata. “I know it’s bizarre to have a breakfast pairing,” Belcastro said, “but I’m obsessed with eggs and our Pinot Gris.” She is studying at the biodynamics school up the street, hoping to convert the vineyard, something that struck me as a significant challenge—but she was confident, unfazed.
